Karen,

Thank you for allowing me some time to respond.

In regard to the Peck complaint. My client had been having financial difficulties for some time. Because of this, he was trying to cover operating expenses and would use resources from one source to apply to another with his intent always being that everyone would get paid as soon as he got caught up. Unfortunately, it snowballed out of control as he could not catch up. He understands now that what he did was not the right way to handle the situation, but also understands that he cannot turn back the clock.

My client is committed to working through this situation to ensure that he can make anyone affected by his well-meaning, desperate, but wrong choices. He and I are currently working with the DMV and the bond company in an effort to ensure that Mr. Peck (and any others) receive any funds/titles to which they may be owed. We are all attempting to sort out and provide a partial and equitable division of the funds from the bond (which will not be enough to fully compensate everyone). Once that has been done, we will be attempting to put a plan in place to continue paying any left over amounts owed to those affected over time.

To date, and in regard to Mr. Peck specifically, my client has not paid Mr. Peck any money. He has spoken with Mr. Peck, but has not met with him in person, mostly because Mr. peck's son has been harassing, threatening and trespassing against my client.

Unfortunately that is all the information I can provide at the moment, and this same response, for the most part, will apply to all of the other complaints that I will still be responding to, although some customers have been paid some amounts of money already, so that type of information may change for that specific complainant. I will have the rest of those responses out shortly. Please let me know if I can be of any further assistance to you.
